

Forestry Graduate Program Internal Awards

Each Spring, the Faculty of Forestry holds an internal award competition for graduate students. More than 35 merit-based awards are available, with several awards in memory of persons who have contributed significantly to the discipline of forestry in their lifetime. Some awards are for graduate students doing research in a particular specialization or geographic area. Adjudication is done by the Faculty of Forestry Internal Awards committee, which is comprised of faculty members representing each of the three departments. Results will be announced in October.

All eligible students are encouraged to apply. While amounts vary, normally, all eligible applicants are successful in receiving some amount of funding from this competition.
